

Theatre Style Seating: Theatre Style seating is considered the best way to maximize space, but does not lend itself to note taking or group interaction. It is ideal for events that feature staged entertainment or when note taking is not required

Classroom Seating: Compared to a schoolroom, this style of seating consists of tables and chairs. This is preferred when attendees need to take notes or spread out materials. It is important to specify how many people you want at each table to ensure that each attendee has enough room to participate in activities.

Boardroom style Seating: Boardroom style seating is applicable to groups that generally gather around one large table in this style.

U-Shape Seating: This style of seating consists of three tables in an Ushape. Attendees are seated around the shape facing each other, but there is a space between the tables that can be used for presentations.

Banquet Seating: Banquet seating is almost always used at functions that include food. The standard banquet table seats 8, 10 or 12 people.

Cocktail style Seating: Cocktail style is almost always used at functions that include stand up served food, pre dinner drinks etc, where people are mingling and talking.

Cabaret Seating: Similar to banquet seating, but the chairs are placed around one-half of the table. The chairs all face the front of the room in this style of seating.
